
The “officially released” date that appears near the beginning of each opinion is the date the opinion will be published in the Connecticut Law Journal or the date it was released as a slip opinion. The operative date for the beginning of all time periods for filing postopinion motions and petitions for certification is the “officially released” date appearing in the opinion. In no event will any such motions be accepted before the “officially released” date.

All opinions are subject to modification and technical correction prior to official publication in the Connecticut Reports and Connecticut Appellate Reports. In the event of discrepancies between the electronic version of an opinion and the print version appearing in the Connecticut Law Journal and subsequently in the Connecticut Reports or Connecticut Appellate Reports, the latest print version is to be considered authoritative.

SULLIVAN, C. J., concurring. I agree with the result reached by the majority opinion. I write separately, however, because, in reaching that result, the majority relies exclusively on the decision in Miller v. Egan, 265 Conn. 301, A.2d (2003), released today. I joined Justice Zarella's concurring opinion in that case, in which he disagreed with the majority's method of statutory analysis. To the extent that the majority in this case relies on that analysis in reaching its conclusion, I disagree.
